I use the search box at any Stack Exchange site. To be more exact, I use it to find the correct page to answer a question. But if it's not possible to search in pages (I mean, that there is no such search box in those pages), is it possible to search at pages in Stack Exchange sites? If yes, how can I do it? A: Yes, you can. It's the search box at the top of the page, after you sign in. I've often come here to find the right question or answer (e.g., "I can't remember how to do X in C#, any pointers?") and typed into it, looking for something specific or hoping to find an answer. The search bar gives you way better results than typing the question here. The canonical way to do that is to use the search bar. But you can also click the "Ask Question" or "Answer Question" link in the header of any question, and then edit the question to include some information that would make it easier to find later.
